CDC Office and Location: A research opportunity is currently available with the Office of Minority Health and Health Equity (OMHHE) at the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) located in Atlanta, Georgia.

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) is one of the major operation components of the Department of Health and Human Services. CDC works to protect America from health, safety and security threats, both foreign and in the U.S. Whether diseases start at home or abroad, are chronic or acute, curable or preventable, human error or deliberate attack, CDC fights disease and supports communities and citizens to do the same.

Research Project: Under the guidance of a mentor, this fellowship opportunity involves the fellow training and gaining experience focused on the science and practice of advancing health equity. This will include training and immersion experiences related to topics such as social and structural determinants of health, vital conditions for community health and well-being, health disparities, health inequities, and place-based health influences. Training also includes conducting needs assessments using qualitative and quantitative tools and the development and dissemination of internal reports and other health equity-related communication documents.

Learning Objectives: The participant will:

- Participate in skills development and networking opportunities afforded by department and partner sponsored events.
- Assist in coordinating the development of internal and external partnership lists, networking and partnership analysis and development skills.
- Assist in landscape assessment to identify gaps in existing health equity education, program, and evaluation work.
- Assist with developing and proposing evaluations in support of health
